Spring 2019

#YearoftheDahlia

This showy tuberous plant is the National Flower of Mexico. The tubers can go directly into the ground in the spring when the ground is warm and there is little chance of frost. One good guideline is to plant at the same time as you would a tomato.

101 Market has "The Season's Best"

Annuals, Combination Containers, Hanging Baskets, Herbs, Pillar Geraniums, Vegetable Plants and so much more is all right here at 101 Market. Perfect for you and your Mother on her day, Sunday May 12.

#YearoftheSalvia

They are among the most common ornamental and culinary plant species you will find. They are considered to be care-free and easy to manage in the garden. They can be in place for years without a need for dividing. They are a favorite of bees and other pollinators.

#YearoftheSnapdragon

Looking for a flower that has multiple uses in the garden, smells great, attracts pollinators and comes in scads of colors? Then you should be planting snapdragons.

#YearofthePumpkin

Today, pumpkins are a staple for fall decorations and recipes.

Eating pumpkin provides numerous health benefits: they are high in fiber, potassium, iron, and vitamins A, B and C while being low in calories, fat, and sodium.

Petals to Pines

As a florist for the past 35 years, I never get tired of learning new things. When it comes to creativity, I started following Laura from Garden Answers on Facebook. She has inspired me to think "into the yard and garden." Using cuttings from shrubs and trees along with flowers around my yard, brings new dimension to my floral arrangements. My style of design has evolved over the years. I am loving the natural, organic look which is being incorporated in my work. There are so many ideas and projects I look forward to sharing with all of you this year. First up is the Succulent Pot in a Pot class on June 8. Plus I'm always open to trying new ideas in my daily floral work or wedding designs. Floral life is full of adventure. Blessings, Happy Spring! Shelly
